In 1801 MIDDLESBROUGH was a small farming hamlet with a population of 25. In 1828 Joseph Pease and fellow Quakers bought 527 acres of land described as a ‘dismal swamp’ and established the Middlesbrough Estate Company. In 1830 they chose the Latin word erimus—‘we shall be’ to signify their ambition to expand. Today, the population is 142,400. In a second wave of erimus, Teesside University—under the leadership of Vice Chancellor Professor Graham Henderson CBE—has added six new buildings to the campus creating a further 23,770m² of academic space and increasing the number of students from 19,228 to 28,786, culminating in being named University of the Year in the Times Higher Education Awards in 2009.
